Navigated by Ballonettes

The B N-1 is of the non-rigid type. It depends for its form and maintenance of balance on pressure of gas within the bag. Navigation is by means of air filled ballonettes. Experiments for the last two years have been made on the gondola and the en-been made on the gondola and the engines.

The B N-1 is unlike anything that has been seen in America. In the first place, it is much targer than the sporting craft that have been built in this country. In the air it will look a good bit like the Zeppelins which have been swooping over London dropping destruction. On close examination, however, the difference in construction can be observed. The Zeppelin is of the rigid type, while the B N-1 resembles rather closely the Clement-Bayard or Zodiac type.

Will Carry Machine Guns

The gondola is designed to carry eight officers. It is 60 feet long and is furnished with outriggers. In it will, possibly, be mounted one or two Lewis guns. It can carry half a ton of explosives, in addition to the necessary fuel, etc. Parts of the car, it is understood, will be covered with steel plate.

The Connecticut Aircraft Company does not expect to build dirigibles as good as the foreign Zeppelin, for example, because it has been impossible to get information from abroad. The company received an order for one kite balloon of 30,000 cubic feet when the army last week ordered three kite and two spherical balloons.

No one in America has built and flown war dirigibles. If the B N-1 really soars eventually over the Gulf of Mexico, that feat, from the standpoint of American gerial defence, will make an except

These provisions, the principal one of which prohibited the General Staff from exercising "administrative" authority, were recognized as a severe blow to a proper development of the army. Judge Advocate General Crowder upheld the apparent intent of the act to make the bureaus paramount in authority to the General Staff. Mr. Baker refused to abide by this opinion and declared it based on a wrong assumption.
